A 26-hectare organic estate in the Loire Valley region of Anjou, Domaine Sauveroy was founded by the Cailleau family in 1947 and became certified organic in 2022. They are firm believers in the power of biodiversity in the vineyard as a substitute for chemical pesticides and herbicides, and have committed to re-establishing woodland areas close to their vines, alongside planting nesting boxes for birds. The young Quentin Cailleau heads up the family winery today, having returned from stints working at wineries around the globe. The results of his first 5 years suggest he's a real talent to watch. They use a combination of stainless steel, French oak, and amphorae, depending on the wine, with success in all styles. Serious quality is already evident, and more to come.
