The bison grass recipe which inspired Zubrowka dates back to the Middle Ages. Bison grass's characteristically sweet smell led to it being placed around church doors on saints' days in medieval Europe, hence its alternative names of 'holy grass' or 'Mary's grass'; the herb is also sacred to various Native American cultures, in which it is used as a traditional medicine and known as 'sweetgrass'. It is also prized for its culinary properties, and is used to flavour traditional teas, sweets – and vodkas. Zubrowka vodka has been produced at Poland's Polmos Bialystok distillery since 1928, and has since cemented its position as one of the five best-selling vodka brands in the world. The distilling and flavouring expertise used to produce such a delicious expression of a traditional recipe are very much on show here. The specially selected grain used in Zubrowka's vanilla vodka is distilled no fewer than seven times for incredible purity and smoothness. It is then filtered four times, including through platinum, to remove any lingering impurities and create the perfect spirit. The vodka is subsequently infused with real vanilla, sourced from Madagascar – no imitation flavourings here – to create a delicious, moreish spirit with real class.
