The Baden region is one of Germany's largest, and is something of a hidden gem. Although its wines are hugely popular in their home country, they have yet to hit the heights abroad of wines from the Mosel or Saar. This is a shame, as the quality of the wines produced here will delight all discerning consumers! Baden itself is directly adjacent to Alsace in France, and is sheltered from the cold by the geological features of the Black Forest and Vosges. This additional warmth when compared to other wine-growing districts on a similar latitude or within Germany means that the region can produce excellent ripe red wines, as well as whites – which is what we are proud to introduce to the UK here.
