Michter's Distillery is one of America's oldest whiskey producers, with roots tracing back to 1753 when it was founded by Swiss Mennonite brothers John and Michael Shenk in Pennsylvania. Initially focused on rye whiskey using local grains and limestone-filtered water, Michter's was among the pioneers in American whiskey production. The distillery weathered many challenges, including Prohibition, changing ownership, and a lengthy hiatus, but its legacy endured.

In the modern era, Michter's brand was revitalised in the 1990s by Joseph J. Magliocco and Richard Newman, relocating production to Kentucky, the heartland of bourbon. Michter's is known for a rigorous grain-to-bottle process emphasising small batch and single cask craftsmanship. The company has innovated in barrel ageing, barrelling proof, and warehouse management to optimise flavour and maturation.
