Deanston Distillery in the Scottish Highlands began as a large 18th-century cotton mill before its transformation into a distillery in 1965. Powered by hydroelectric energy from the River Teith, it harnesses pure local water and Scottish barley grown in mineral-rich soils to produce its distinctive whisky. The LIMITED 1996 Deanston 26yr matured for 26 years in a single bourbon hogshead, ageing naturally in historic weaving sheds that provide a cool, stable environment ideal for whisky maturation.

Located just north of Doune, Deanston benefits from a unique microclimate shaped by the river and cool stone buildings of the former mill. The region is known for high-quality Scottish barley with a low yield, contributing to the whisky's robust character. Deanston exclusively uses locally grown barley and bottles all single malts without chill filtration or caramel colouring, ensuring maximum flavour and authenticity.
