Foursquare Rum Distillery, located in St. Philip, Barbados, is a modern yet deeply traditional rum producer with roots dating back to the 1820s through the Seale family. Officially established as Foursquare in 1996 on the site of a historic sugar plantation active since the 17th century, the distillery has become renowned worldwide for its commitment to quality, innovation, and heritage.

Richard Seale, a fourth-generation rum maker and master blender, leads the distillery, emphasising time-honoured methods alongside innovative techniques to perfect rum production. Foursquare produces a blend of pot and column still rums, resulting in a rich, smooth style with complex aromatic profiles. The distillery employs a specially controlled two-step fermentation process, utilising yeast imported from South Africa and molasses sourced primarily from Guyana. The wash is blended over a 20-hour period to generate a distinctive, fragrant spirit.

A hallmark of Foursquare's production is ageing rums in American white oak ex-bourbon casks, which impart smoothness and vanilla sweetness. The Exceptional Cask Selection series, including the Convocation release, takes maturation further by finishing rums in a variety of rare casks like Sherry, Port, Madeira, and Zinfandel barrels, adding complexity and unique flavour dimensions. No additives, sweeteners, or colourants are used, preserving natural purity and terroir expression in their rums. The climate of Barbados, with warm temperatures and oceanic influences, combined with rigorous craftsmanship, creates rums prized for their balance, intensity, and finesse.
