Blackwater Distillery, based on the south coast of Ireland, is creating limited, innovative Irish Whiskies. The small-scale distillery crafts small batches that are unique in style and character. In the 1970's Irish Whiskey had largely been redesigned as a blended product, so the flavours that made Irish the world's whiskey of choice were lost to time. On a journey to rediscover the true characteristics of Irish whiskey, spirits writer and TV producer Peter Mulryan set about on a journey to uncover lost flavours and rediscover the traditional distillation process that makes Irish whiskey so unique – it was a journey back to its roots. Blackwater's small-scale production allows for meticulous attention to detail. With a double distillation process, and a focus on the source of the flavour, found from the grain, the whiskies are made using 100% Irish malt, raw barley, oats, wheat and rye to retain maximum character and flavour.

Blackwater's Single Malt, Single Cask Irish Whisky PMD II: Return of the Dragon, is their first aged statement release. Aged 5 years in apple brandy casks and bottled at 59.2% abv, cask strength, only 340 bottles were released. Produced from a grain mashbill of 25% Turf-smoked Malt and 75% Malted Barley, it's produced from 100% Irish barley, grown and malted on the same farm. A real Irish whiskey origin story, featuring a dragon, with a heart of fire and a belly full of smokey stewed apples.
