Ca' De' Medici is a historic, family-run Italian winery located in Reggio Emilia, within the Emilia-Romagna. Founded in 1890 by Remigio Medici and his sons, the estate grew from a small 19th-century family inn into an internationally recognised brand, earning a gold medal at the 1911 International Exposition in Rome. Today, the winery is managed by the fourth and fifth generations of the Medici family. It combines traditional winemaking techniques and grapes with modern commercial production. The winery specializes in authentic, high-quality sparkling wines, focusing primarily on local grape varieties like Lambrusco di Sorbara and Lambrusco Grasperossa. The recent installation of solar panels means that the winery produces 70% of its own energy, and the aim is to become completely sustainable in the near future.

The Lambrusco Grasperossa Remigio 100 is made from the traditional mono-fermentation technique starting with free-run must from thick skinned Lambrusco Grasperossa grapes grown in the hills of Scandiano and Canossa around Castelvetro di Modena. Deep ruby in colour, this is packed with broad dark cherry fruits, aromas of wild herbs and spice, and a gentle touch of tannin. A satisfyingly gastronomic Lambrusco.
