Ca' De' Medici is a historic, family-run Italian winery located in Reggio Emilia, within the Emilia-Romagna. Founded in 1890 by Remigio Medici and his sons, the estate grew from a small 19th-century family inn into an internationally recognised brand, earning a gold medal at the 1911 International Exposition in Rome. Today, the winery is managed by the fourth and fifth generations of the Medici family. It combines traditional winemaking techniques and grapes with modern commercial production. The winery specializes in authentic, high-quality sparkling wines, focusing primarily on local grape varieties like Lambrusco di Sorbara and Lambrusco Grasparossa. The recent installation of solar panels means that the winery produces 70% of its own energy, and the aim is to become completely sustainable in the near future.

The 1911 Lambrusco is made from the Charmat method from Lambrusco Marani, Maestri and Salamino. A dry sparkling red with 13g/l residual sugar and just 10.5% ABV, this is ruby in colour, with soft blackberry, pomegranate and wild plum flavours, allied to soft, persistent bubbles. This is perfect for everyday drinking either alone or with cured meats and pizza.
